Dana Parham Hoping to Hit It Big With Odds On Equuleus

By Perry Lefko

One of North America's foremost authorities on sports wagering has gambled some of his fortune on the standard-bred business as an owner and breeder of racehorses, opting to give back to the sport. It hasn't exactly been easy and at times it's been frustrating dealing with the industry, but this just might be the year that Dana Parham hits it rich.

Owner Dana Parnham thinks Odds On Equuleus is poised to have a big year (New Image Media)

Parham, whose business International Software Services has wagered close to $5 billion since it began in 1995, is feeling good about his three-year-old homebred pacing colt Odds On Equuleus who last year won five of nine races and banked $413,665. Trained by Chicago-based Robin Schadt and driven by Hall of Famer John Campbell, the son of Art Major out of the Jennas Beach Boy mare Latte Lady had a mark of 1:50 flat in his juvenile season. He recorded a win in the Nassagaweya Stakes and was a runnerup by a neck in the $1 million Metro Pace to Captaintreacherous and third by a quarter length in the Champlain to Captive Audience.

"I thought he was the best two-year-old, I know a lot of people would disagree, but I think he's going to prove to be the best three-year-old this year," Parham said. "Now that's saying a lot, that's a lot to go on the line for, but we'll see where we're at come November. Will he prove to be the best three-year-old? He certainly has every chance to be that. We're excited about that prospect. That's what life is. We dream about finding that trout stream that no one else has ever discovered, or a lottery ticket or winning the Super Bowl. Having a three-year-old colt that has a real, real chance of being the best three-year-old colt that year is very exciting."

Parham said hitting it big with a three-year-old homebred would be like winning the Super Bowl by 20 points. The fact he has a live ticket, so to speak, who happens to be a colt offers the possibility of a huge payoff in purse earnings and the possibility of breeding rights as a stallion.

"The best thing that I can do is not get too high and not get too low. That's basically how I have to handle everything," he said.

It's a philosophy that applies to all his years of gambling, knowing that not every day can yield success. Fortunately, Parham has done so well that he's been able to parlay his winnings into other businesses, including a fish aquarium/cabinetry emporium, record company, home renovation and racing stable.

An Ohio native who has been based full-time in Florida for almost 30 years, Parham began his interest in harness racing by going to tracks such as Scioto Downs and Beulah Park as a teenager and started making his first bets at age 17. He gave up his formal education after high school and became a full-time gambler. He wagered on poker, blackjack and sports full-time in Las Vegas from 1978-96, then turned to computer automated wagering and focused on betting on racing.

He began his racing operation in 2000 after meeting Schadt, a relatively unknown Chicago-based trainer. They had several phone conversations pertaining to the business of racing and the philosophies of building a successful stable before acquiring their first racehorse, a $30,000 claimer named Staying Away N racing at Maywood. Parham originally raced under his name, but later changed it to Odds On Racing and prefaced most of his horses' names with Odds On. Two years after the start-up, he bought a 100-acre farm and called it Odds On Acres and built an all-purpose training facility.

Odds On Racing Stable has yearlings, horses of racing age and broodmares. The stable has a website, www.oddsonracing.com that offers information about the stable and its history, information on harness racing news worldwide and gambling tips.

"I'm giving back to the sport that has been kind to me," he said. "I don't bet for fun. The wagering is a business. Owning the horses is for fun. We try to run it like a business, but the math is pretty much against you when you add up the cost of all the horses in North America versus the purses they are paying, it's a huge losing business. There's a few people that make money, just like there's a few people who make money playing the lottery, but it's a big loser overall."

He began buying yearlings and then found he grew too quickly without a solid return on his investment.

"I just tried to grow too fast," he said. "Now I'm taking a step back and I'm fine with what we are doing now. I'm having more fun with it now. Horse racing has been good to me. I've tried to give something back. I've tried to be a good owner. I try to be a good ambassador for the sport. But horse racing is in a bad state. I didn't put it in the state it's in. It's put itself there. There's a lot of people that could look at themselves and they've helped it to become one of those. I'm not one of them. I think I've been good to horse racing and I want to continue to be good for it, but if it ends tomorrow I'll go off and do something else. The people that run racing don't seem to understand a lot. Nothing gets done and I don't think anything ever will. Between regulators, the people that work at the track, the different rules from state to state and everyone protecting what little turf they have left it's very difficult to see anything get done."

"There's not very good communication or very good knowledge on how to make our sport better. But when you have a monopoly for so many years and then you don't have a monopoly anymore, I guess it's hard to function as a business. Now they get special privileges like slot machines. Some of these guys aren't even making it with slot machines. The sport's in disarray. There's just a lot of problems that the other sports don't have."

"Anybody who shows any promise quick, let's get them off of the track, and anything that doesn't have promise, well, they have to stay there. There's never any good five-year-old colt racing, is there? If they're any good, they're in the stud barn by the time they're three. You tell me how we're going to solve all these problems. I don't believe we are going to be able to solve these problems and horse racing will probably be in further decline."

"The reason we have a million tracks is because back in the day the only way was to physically be at the track in your neighborhood. We don't need racetracks on every corner anymore. The other thing is, so many racetracks seem to be in crappy neighborhoods because they've been there forever. The old ones don't do well anymore, so why build new ones? I don't know what the answer is, but in other sports, baseball for instance, they're always building a new park and it's always a home run when they do it."

"We just face problems. I don't know the answers are, but the people that are running horse racing they certainly don't have the answers because it keeps going downhill and they keep doing the same thing. I would think they ought to change something."

Parham said he would consider imparting his ideas in a kind of a czar role, if only for a short period of time until some really talented individuals are brought in to oversee the business.

"But that's telling the regulators we're all going to have one regulation, either this drug's legal or illegal, or it can be administered by the track or a vet," he said. "These are the rules, whatever it may be. These are the takeouts, whatever. It's got to be consistent across the country. Like in football when the Cleveland Browns play the Pittsburgh Steelers, they don't have a whole different set of rules do they? It's the same referees. If one of the players did something wrong, he gets the same suspension. If he gets a drug suspension, he can't just go down to Cincinnati and start playing down there for four weeks."

"But this is the stuff we do in horse racing. You may need a czar. The sports that have done well have a czar or commissioner or whatever you want to call that person. I don't like a one-man rule thing, but for certain entities it seems to work. How are you going to get all the states that compete with one another and now they can't compete? Some states have big investments and aren't going to allow the playing field to get even. They spend a lot of money getting where they are. They wanted the horse racing business and they're getting it. I think maybe the answer is the supertrack thing. You need less races and bigger pools in the races."

Their Sport in Crisis, Italian Horsemen Take Their Fight to the Streets

By Giorgio Barsotti

Determined to have their voice heard concerning the dire state of racing in Italy, horsemen there have waged mass protests in recent days in which they have taken their horses and sulkies to the street. There have been actions in

Italian horsemen are fighting back

Naples, Pisa, Palermo, Rome and elsewhere, with the one in Rome bringing the main motorway between Firenze and Bologna to a near standstill.

With no payments to the industry since June and the subsequent dissolution of the racing bodies Unire and Assi, the financing of racing is under the control of the Ministers of Agriculture and Economy, and has been held up by bureaucracy and the added complication of the upcoming general election in less than three weeks' time. The latest chaos has revived scenes of early last year, when the country witnessed a near 40-day blackout period in the racing calendar in response to a proposed 40% cut in prize money.

Despite the promise made by the Ministers of Agriculture and Economy to unblock 30 million Euros to pay July and August installments, it is expected that no transactions will take place in the immediate future and there is no indication as to when the remainder of last year's funds will be released.

Italian racing has been financed by revenue from betting, but in the last five years this has fallen dramatically and at present, betting on racing sits at around 1% of the country's total gambling expenditure. Plans to reform betting are still up in the air, as it is currently under the control of Aams, which is now part of the Custom department and the immediate concern is to avoid the specter of bankruptcy.

June, when they received their last payment from Unire. After months of broken promises from the authorities, the racing world is exploding, and the trotting people are getting more and more desperate.

Napoli Racecourse, the pride of every trotting aficionado, has been closed since last October. Racecourse employees there have without wages for nine months now and the company that runs the track is risking bankruptcy. The home of Gran Premio Lotteria, where 20,000 people used to crowd the track on event days, is finished. San Siro, "La scala del trotto," closed its stables in November and has not raced since Dec. 31. At Roma, the Tordivalle track, home of the Italian Derby has been closed since Jan. 31. The company is bankrupt and employees have gone without wages for many months. The site has been sold to the new Roma football club for a stadium. Montecatini, a historical Tuscany track that used to attract more than 20,000 people in mid-August for its Gran Premio, closed last summer and there are plans to sell the site to developers.

For Italian trotting, it is nothing less than a war

Prize money was cut by 50% in 2012 and racecourse revenue dropped 50% as well. There are no plans for the future, and until a new government will be installed after the general elections at the end of the month, nothing is expected to happen. Knowing the time table of Italian politics, the aim is to survive for all 2013. But how the racing world will be able to survive is anyone's guess.

We WANT you to win!

The Ultimate Harness Racing Program For The Serious Player

TRACKMASTER
An EQUIBASE Company

Racecourses are runs by for-profit companies in Italy and the big ones are in serious financial trouble. The group that runs Napoli is finished. But there are big issues even for Trenno which runs San Siro in Milano and Montecatini. There have been talks of that company losing 5 million Euros a year. With these conditions, it is difficult to see the light at the end of the tunnel.

To cover all outstanding money owed for 2012, the Minister of Agriculture and Economy needs over 60 million euros. After the first big strike and protest in Rome, the minister issued an edict to unblock 30 million euros to start to pay part of the 2012 money. A meeting between racing representatives and the ministers will be held in Rome on Monday, where they'll try to free up the rest of the money that is owed for 2012.

Mario Catania, the Italian Minister of Agriculture and a former steward at Capannelle Racecourse, blamed the Minister of Economy for delaying the payments and accused his colleague of being uninterested in fixing the racing industry. Racecourse lobbies have influenced the Minister of Economy with a proposal to transform Italian tracks into Racinos, a move that, according to Catania, will kill racing within 10 years.

Roberto Brischetto, from Turin in Piemonte, land of wine and truffles, is part owner of Varenne and manages allevamento il Grifone, where the famous champions stands. Varenne is the white fly in these dump days for Italian trotting. He has produced four Derby winners form six crops.

His progeny has won over 100 group races. Varenne, who stands for 15,000 Euros, has around 200 foals born every year, of which 150 are in Italy.

The most famous Italian trotter has been a great investment so far for his connections. Still Brischetto is very worried about the future of Italian trotting.

"The main Italian trotting tracks have shut their doors," he said. "It's like having the Seria A football championship playing without the Milano, Roma and Napoli stadiums. It simply doesn't work like that. The racing world may bear some responsibility for this situation, but politicians have ignored our world; the story of the unpaid prize money of 2012 is emblematic of the lack of attention of the government to the racing. The industry is collapsing without the money and, moreover, is without a serious project for the future. Italian trotting breeders use to breed over 3,900 trotters a year. In 2012 only 2,500 trotters were foaled, and the numbers will go down dramatically again this year. A lot of big name trotting breeders closed their business or cut back badly the number of mares. It's just not possible to keep going in this situation. We do need our main tracks to open soon; we do a financial business plan for the industry. If not it'll be the end."

Showplace Farms Voices Objections Over Gural Investigator

By Bill Finley

Management at the Showplace Farms training center is attempting to put restrictions on the private investigator hired by Jeff Gural, restrictions that Gural said he is unlikely to abide by.

In a letter written by attorney Jeff Pocaro to Gural, the Showplace management asked that investigator Brice Cote jump through a number of hoops before being allowed to investigate trainers at the Central New Jersey training center. It is not clear what Showplace would do if Cote and/or Gural do not agree to the conditions, but Showplace is a private facility that likely could keep Cote out if it so desires.

Showplace is asking that Cote:

- Has a sit-down with Showplace management to discuss his plans.
- Furnishes photocopies of a New Jersey Racing Commission license.
- Agrees to a mutually agreed-upon Indemnification Agreement.
- Agrees to sign in out at the Showplace offices each time he visits the facility.
- Agrees to show up at the farm only during normal training hours.

Only trainers that have signed agreements giving the Gural team permission to investigate their barns at any time are being allowed to race at the Meadowlands . There are a handful of smaller stables at Showplace that do not regularly compete at the Meadowlands and have not signed Gural's waiver.

"Here I am trying to do something good for the sport and I get this kind of letter from Showplace," Gural said. "They say they support my integrity efforts, but they want to put all these restrictions on the investigator. It's frustrating. To get a letter like that makes me wonder how bad the problem might be at some of these training centers. Are the trainers telling them they don't want this guy coming around?"

Gural said he is willing to sit down with Showplace management but didn't sound ready to give in to their demands. He said is particularly concerned about Showplace requiring Cote to sign in and out and trying to limit his investigations to normal business hours.

"As long as the trainers have given us permission to investigate at their barns I think Brice should be able to come whenever he wants and should not have to sign in and sign out," Gural said.

He added that if Showplace continues to stand in the way of his investigator he would be forced to bar all trainers stabled there from racing at the Meadowlands.

Trainers stabled at Showplace include Linda Toscano, Kevin McDermott, Ken Rucker, Casie Coleman and Joe Holloway.

With Handle Soaring, Meadowlands Increases Pool Guarantees (Meadowlands press release)

In the first six weeks of the 2013 Meadowlands racing season, the bettors have spoken loud and clear. The fifty-cent pick five and the brand new early pick four are in high demand and the Meadowlands Racetrack is happy to respond to that demand.

Effective Thursday February 14th, the Meadowlands Racetrack will be raising a pair of its guaranteed wagers. The fifty-cent pick five, which has seen an average pool of $45,000 will increase its guaranteed pool from $15,000 to $25,000. In addition, the early pick four, which has sported an average pool of roughly $50,000 will increase its guarantee from $25,000 to $35,000. These new guarantees will support the always popular late pick four, with guarantees of $50,000 on Thursday and Friday and $75,000 on Saturday. All three of these wagers will retain their 15% takeout rate.

Beginning this upcoming Thursday February 14th, the Meadowlands Racetrack guaranteed wagers will be as follows:

--$.50 Cent Pick 5 (Races 1-5): $25,000 Guaranteed (15% Takeout)

--$1 Early Pick 4 (Races 3-6): $35,000 Guaranteed (15% Takeout)

--$1 Late Pick 4 (Races 7-10): $50,000 Guaranteed (Thursday and Friday) (15% Takeout)

--$75,000 Guaranteed (Saturday) (15% Takeout)

This announcement comes on the heels of a Thursday evening that featured a $51,000 pick five, a $68,000 early pick four and a $104,000 late pick four pool. With the Meadowlands handle continuing to soar, these three nightly wagers have proved to be the three best bets in harness racing.

Rooting For Brice Cote

I enjoyed your article on Brice Cote. I hope he gets the support from the race horse industry that he's going to need. Horse trainers are a rare breed of people who come in all shapes and sizes, sadly some of them will risk their livelihood to get ahead in the game. I left the sport in 1994 after 23 years of driving and training horses while working a full time job as policeman in Worthington Ohio. Drugs like EPO were taking over the sport. Horses were suddenly staying alive on the outside or finishing with faster last quarters that were unheard of before. The last horse I trained was given to me because he was emaciated and couldn't keep weight. He had been pacing 1:54 at Scioto Downs and looked and smelled like death. After sixty days I was able to get the horse back on his feet. I reported the incident to the Ohio Race Commission and was told they needed more proof and that the trainers and vets involved reputations would suffer and hurt the industry. Made a lot of friends and experienced a different culture of people, some enjoying the beauty of the horse while others seeking the recognition and monetary gains that they needed in life.

I know what it's like being a cop in the horse racing industry. There a lot of good people trying to take care of their horses the right way. The corrupt individuals are always looking for new ways to get ahead. The sad thing is the horses are the victims and can't defend themselves. Hopefully Brice Cote will get the support he needs to clean up the sport.

Thank You
- Tom Verne

PS: Tell Brice to stick it out the and don't give up.

Stop Thinking Only Of Today

Dean Towers hit it on the nose...again!

His column on the sad situation in Ontario is dead on: it sucks !!! Who is losing out? All the nice friendly folks that racetrackers have known for years. However, the "flag" he waves in his last sentence is the key: "...maybe it's a clarion call to band together to change this sport for the better." Harness horseman have to take a broad look at the situation and start being their own advocates for change. A sport can't exist without fans ! A gambling sport can't exist without gamblers !! Take a look at the betting pools at your slots track. If you bet $100 to win you probably will knock your odds below even money. Horseman must be willing to contribute $$$'s along with race-track management to promote our sport. Horseman have the capacity to do so. Stop thinking only of today; think of the future. One easy idea: instead of racing 15 and 16 races a day/night use some of those purse $$$'s to help promote our sport via marketing and public relation initiatives.

Management will probably be very happy to participate in cooperative marketing programs knowing the horseman are putting "skin-in-the-game." Nine or ten quality races a night are more than sufficient for any gambler or fan. Horseman can't expect a slot track owner to use slot profits on harness racing that generates very little revenue in today's world when an extra row of slot machines kick out profits as if it were water from a faucet.

In conclusion, this "is" a clarion call (for horseman) to band together and change the sport for the better.
